	CLASSIFICATION CONFIDENTIAL
	CENTRAL INTELLIGENCE AGENCY
	INFORMATION REPORT
DUNTRY	USSR DATE DISTR. 8 Sept 195	4 50X1
JBJECT	The Antiaircraft Artillery School NO OF PAGES 2
	at Yevpatoriya/PVO Organization
LACE CQUIREE	NO. OF ENCLS. (LISTED BELOW)
TE QUIRE	SUPPLEMENT TO REPORT NO.	. j
•	NFORMATION 50X1
IB OF .	TAPONRAL LON	.#2- N
F THE UNITED THE	THIS IS UNEVALUATED INFORMATION CONTRAIN TO CO ON RECEIP OF AN UNAUTHORIZED FEEDON 15 CONTRAIN TO CO RECEIP OF AN UNAUTHORIZED FEEDON 15 CONTRAIN TO CO RECEIP OF AN UNAUTHORIZED FEEDON 15	1
ROHIBITED B	LAN. THE REPRODUCTION OF THIS FORM IS PROMISITED. 50X1
		:
		·.
		÷.
	A military school was founded in 1934 in Varnetoring in the Crimes. It was	·.
	A military school was founded in 1934 in Yevpatoriya in the Crimea. It was named the Antiaircraft Artillery (AAA) School (Shkola Zenitni Artillerii).
50X1	named the Antiaircraft Artillery (AAA) School (Shkola Zenitni Artillerii). AAA (Zenitnaya Artilleria) was a part of the Artillery. The school offered
	A military school was founded in 1934 in Yevpatoriya in the Crimea. It was named the Antiaircraft Artillery (AAA) School (Shkola Zenitni Artillerii). AAA (Zenitnaya Artilleria) was a part of the Artillery. The school offered advanced courses incorporating latest known techniques in AAA.
50X1	named the Antiaircraft Artillery (AAA) School (Shkola Zenitni Artillerii). AAA (Zenitnaya Artilleria) was a part of the Artillery. The school offered advanced courses incorporating latest known techniques in AAA.
50X1	named the Antiaircraft Artillery (AAA) School (Shkola Zenitni Artillerii). AAA (Zenitnaya Artilleria) was a part of the Artillery. The school offered advanced courses incorporating latest known techniques in AAA. At least some of the students
50X1	named the Antiaircraft Artillery (AAA) School (Shkola Zenitni Artillerii). AAA (Zenitnaya Artilleria) was a part of the Artillery. The school offered advanced courses incorporating latest known techniques in AAA. At least some of the students were quite important officers, such as the Chief of Artillery of a military
50X1	named the Antiaircraft Artillery (AAA) School (Shkola Zenitni Artillerii). AAA (Zenitnaya Artilleria) was a part of the Artillery. The school offered advanced courses incorporating latest known techniques in AAA. At least some of the students were quite important officers, such as the Chief of Artillery of a military district (okrug). The school was not a general PVO (Protive-Vogdushneve
50X1	named the Antiaircraft Artillery (AAA) School (Shkola Zenitni Artillerii). AAA (Zenitnaya Artilleria) was a part of the Artillery. The school offered advanced courses incorporating latest known techniques in AAA. At least some of the students were quite important officers, such as the Chief of Artillery of a military district (okrug). The school was not a general PVO (Protivo-Vozdushneye Oborona - Air Defense) installation, but an AAA school. Of course, there
50X1	named the Antiaircraft Artillery (AAA) School (Shkola Zenitni Artillerii). AAA (Zenitnaya Artilleria) was a part of the Artillery. The school offered advanced courses incorporating latest known techniques in AAA. At least some of the students were quite important officers, such as the Chief of Artillery of a military district (okrug). The school was not a general PVO (Protive-Vozdushneye Oborona - Air Defense) installation, but an AAA school. Of course, there may be more than one school there now 1954.
50X1	named the Antiaircraft Artillery (AAA) School (Shkola Zenitni Artillerii). AAA (Zenitnaya Artilleria) was a part of the Artillery. The school offered advanced courses incorporating latest known techniques in AAA. At least some of the students were quite important officers, such as the Chief of Artillery of a military district (okrug). The school was not a general PVO (Protive-Vozdushneye Oborona - Air Defense) installation, but an AAA school. Of course, there may be more than one school there now 1954. At Yevpatoriya there was also a glider school under what is now called
50X1	named the Antiaircraft Artillery (AAA) School (Shkola Zenitni Artillerii). AAA (Zenitnaya Artilleria) was a part of the Artillery. The school offered advanced courses incorporating latest known techniques in AAA. At least some of the students were quite important officers, such as the Chief of Artillery of a military district (okrug). The school was not a general PVO (Protive-Voxdushneye Oborona - Air Defense) installation, but an AAA school. Of course, there may be more than one school there now 1954. At Yevpatoriya there was also a glider school under what is now called DOSARM. It was lecated there because the air currents were suitable. This
50X1	named the Antiaircraft Artillery (AAA) School (Shkola Zenitni Artillerii). AAA (Zenitnaya Artilleria) was a part of the Artillery. The school offered advanced courses incorporating latest known techniques in AAA. At least some of the students were quite important officers, such as the Chief of Artillery of a military district (okrug). The school was not a general PVO (Protive-Vozdushneye Oborona - Air Defense) installation, but an AAA school. Of course, there may be more than one school there now 1954. At Yevpatoriya there was also a glider school under what is now called DOSARM. It was located there because the air currents were suitable. This was also a help to the AAA school in such activities as sending up target
50X1	named the Antiaircraft Artillery (AAA) School (Shkola Zenitni Artillerii). AAA (Zenitnaya Artilleria) was a part of the Artillery. The school offered advanced courses incorporating latest known techniques in AAA. At least some of the students were quite important officers, such as the Chief of Artillery of a military district (okrug). The school was not a general PVO (Protive-Voxdushneye Oborona - Air Defense) installation, but an AAA school. Of course, there may be more than one school there now 1954. At Yevpatoriya there was also a glider school under what is now called DOSARM. It was lecated there because the air currents were suitable. This
50X1	named the Antiaircraft Artillery (AAA) School (Shkola Zenitni Artillerii). AAA (Zenitnaya Artilleria) was a part of the Artillery. The school offered advanced courses incorporating latest known techniques in AAA. At least some of the students were quite important officers, such as the Chief of Artillery of a military district (okrug). The school was not a general PVO (Protive-Vozdushneye Oborona - Air Defense) installation, but an AAA school. Of course, there may be more than one school there now 1954. At Yevpatoriya there was also a glider school under what is now called DOSARM. It was located there because the air currents were suitable. This was also a help to the AAA school in such activities as sending up target balleons.
50X1	named the Antiaircraft Artillery (AAA) School (Shkola Zenitni Artillerii). AAA (Zenitnaya Artilleria) was a part of the Artillery. The school offered advanced courses incorporating latest known techniques in AAA. At least some of the students were quite important officers, such as the Chief of Artillery of a military district (okrug). The school was not a general PVO (Protive-Vozdushneye Oborona - Air Defense) installation, but an AAA school. Of course, there may be more than one school there now 1954. At Yevpatoriya there was also a glider school under what is now called DOSARM. It was lecated there because the air currents were suitable. This was also a help to the AAA school in such activities as sending up target balleons. Within PVO were included AAA, fighter planes, camouflage units, and fire fighters. There were no PVO organizations with Army units, only AAA. PVO
50X1	named the Antiaircraft Artillery (AAA) School (Shkola Zenitni Artillerii). AAA (Zenitnaya Artilleria) was a part of the Artillery. The school offered advanced courses incorporating latest known techniques in AAA. At least some of the students were quite important officers, such as the Chief of Artillery of a military district (okrug). The school was not a general PVO (Protive-Vozdushneye Oborona - Air Defense) installation, but an AAA school. Of course, there may be more than one school there now 1954. At Yevpatoriya there was also a glider school under what is now called DOSARM. It was located there because the air currents were suitable. This was also a help to the AAA school in such activities as sending up target balleons. Within PVO were included AAA, fighter planes, camouflage units, and fire fighters. There were no PVO organizations with Army units, only AAA. PVO was used for the defense of rear areas; for example, there was a PVO corps
50X1	named the Antiaircraft Artillery (AAA) School (Shkola Zenitni Artillerii). AAA (Zenitnaya Artilleria) was a part of the Artillery. The school offered advanced courses incorporating latest known techniques in AAA. At least some of the students were quite important officers, such as the Chief of Artillery of a military district (okrug). The school was not a general PVO (Protive-Vozdushneye Oborona - Air Defense) installation, but an AAA school. Of course, there may be more than one school there now 1954. At Yevpatoriya there was also a glider school under what is now called DOSARM. It was located there because the air currents were suitable. This was also a help to the AAA school in such activities as sending up target balleons. Within PVO were included AAA, fighter planes, camouflage units, and fire fighters. There were no PVC organizations with Army units, only AAA. PVO was used for the defense of rear areas; for example, there was a PVO corps in the Baku area. However, with the outbreak of World War II each army
50X1 50X1	named the Antiaircraft Artillery (AAA) School (Shkola Zenitni Artillerii). AAA (Zenitnaya Artilleria) was a part of the Artillery. The school offered advanced courses incorporating latest known techniques in AAA. At least some of the students were quite important officers, such as the Chief of Artillery of a military district (okrug). The school was not a general PVO (Protive-Vozdushneye Oborona - Air Defense) installation, but an AAA school. Of course, there may be more than one school there now 1954. At Yevpatoriya there was also a glider school under what is now called DOSARM. It was located there because the air currents were suitable. This was also a help to the AAA school in such activities as sending up target balleons. Within PVO were included AAA, fighter planes, camouflage units, and fire fighters. There were no PVO organizations with Army units, only AAA. PVO was used for the defense of rear areas; for example, there was a PVO corps in the Baku area. However, with the outbreak of World War II each army had a small section under the Chief of PVO (Nachalnik PVO), who was in charge
50X1	named the Antiaircraft Artillery (AAA) School (Shkola Zenitni Artillerii). AAA (Zenitnaya Artilleria) was a part of the Artillery. The school offered advanced courses incorporating latest known techniques in AAA. At least some of the students were quite important officers, such as the Chief of Artillery of a military district (okrug). The school was not a general PVO (Protive-Vozdushneye Oborona - Air Defense) installation, but an AAA school. Of course, there may be more than one school there now 1954. At Yevpateriya there was also a glider school under what is now called DOSARM. It was located there because the air currents were suitable. This was also a help to the AAA school in such activities as sending up target balleons. Within PVO were included AAA, fighter planes, camouflage units, and fire fighters. There were no PVO organizations with Army units, only AAA. PVO was used for the defense of rear areas; for example, there was a PVO corps in the Baku area. However, with the outbreak of World War II each army had a small section under the Chief of PVO (Nachalnik PVO), who was in charge of AAA and camouflage.	7
50X1 50X1	named the Antiaircraft Artillery (AAA) School (Shkola Zenitni Artillerii). AAA (Zenitnaya Artilleria) was a part of the Artillery. The school offered advanced courses incorporating latest known techniques in AAA. At least some of the students were quite important officers, such as the Chief of Artillery of a military district (okrug). The school was not a general PVO (Protive-Vozdushneye Oborona - Air Defense) installation, but an AAA school. Of course, there may be more than one school there now 1954. At Yevpatoriya there was also a glider school under what is now called DOSARM. It was located there because the air currents were suitable. This was also a help to the AAA school in such activities as sending up target balleons. Within PVO were included AAA, fighter planes, camouflage units, and fire fighters. There were no PVO organizations with Army units, only AAA. PVO was used for the defense of rear areas; for example, there was a PVO corps in the Baku area. However, with the outbreak of World War II each army had a small section under the Chief of PVO (Nachalnik PVO), who was in charge of AAA and camouflage. This type of organization was probably eliminated subsequently because it duplicated the functions of AAA commanding	7
50X1 50X1	named the Antiaircraft Artillery (AAA) School (Shkola Zenitni Artillerii). AAA (Zenitnaya Artilleria) was a part of the Artillery. The school offered advanced courses incorporating latest known techniques in AAA. At least some of the students were quite important officers, such as the Chief of Artillery of a military district (okrug). The school was not a general PVO (Protive-Vozdushneye Oborona - Air Defense) installation, but an AAA school. Of course, there may be more than one school there now 1954. At Yevpatoriya there was also a glider school under what is now called DOSARM. It was lecated there because the air currents were suitable. This was also a help to the AAA school in such activities as sending up target balleons. Within PVO were included AAA, fighter planes, camouflage units, and fire fighters. There were no PVO organizations with Army units, only AAA. PVO was used for the defense of rear areas; for example, there was a PVO corps in the Baku area. However, with the outbreak of World War II each army had a small section under the Chief of PVO (Nachalnik PVO), who was in charge of AAA and camouflage	7
50X1 50X1	named the Antiaircraft Artillery (AAA) School (Shkola Zenitni Artillerii). AAA (Zenitnaya Artilleria) was a part of the Artillery. The school offered advanced courses incorporating latest known techniques in AAA. At least some of the students Were quite important officers, such as the Chief of Artillery of a military district (okrug). The school was not a general PVO (Protive-Vozdushneye Oborona - Air Defense) installation, but an AAA school. Of course, there may be more than one school there now 1954. At Yevpatoriya there was also a glider school under what is now called DOSARM. It was located there because the air currents were suitable. This was also a help to the AAA school in such activities as sending up target balleons. Within PVO were included AAA, fighter planes, camouflage units, and fire fighters. There were no PVC organizations with Army units, only AAA. PVO was used for the defense of rear areas; for example, there was a PVO corps in the Baku area. However, with the outbreak of World War II each army had a small section under the Chief of PVO (Nachalnik PVO), who was in charge of AAA and camouflage. There was a separate PVO "Upravlenie" (Administration) in the Ministry of Defense. PVO included both Army and civilian personnel. The latter were subordinated to the military in PVO. although the civilians were	7
50X1 50X1	named the Antiaircraft Artillery (AAA) School (Shkola Zenitni Artillerii). AAA (Zenitnaya Artilleria) was a part of the Artillery. The school offered advanced courses incorporating latest known techniques in AAA. At least some of the students were quite important officers, such as the Chief of Artillery of a military district (okrug). The school was not a general PVO (Protive-Vozdushneye Oborona - Air Defense) installation, but an AAA school. Of course, there may be more than one school there now 1954. At Yevpatoriya there was also a glider school under what is now called DOSARM. It was located there because the air currents were suitable. This was also a help to the AAA school in such activities as sending up target balleons. Within PVO were included AAA, fighter planes, camouflage units, and fire fighters. There were no PVC organizations with Army units, only AAA. PVO was used for the defense of rear areas; for example, there was a PVO corps in the Baku area. However, with the outbreak of World War II each army had a small section under the Chief of PVO (Nachalnik PVO), who was in charge of AAA and camouflage	7
50X1 50X1	named the Antiaircraft Artillery (AAA) School (Shela Zenitni Artillerii). AAA (Zenitnaya Artilleria) was a part of the Artillery. The school offered advanced courses incorporating latest known techniques in AAA. At least some of the students were quite important officers, such as the Chief of Artillery of a military district (okrug). The school was not a general PVO (Protive-Vozdushneye Oberona - Air Defense) installation, but an AAA school. Of course, there may be more than one school there now 1954. At Yevpatoriya there was also a glider school under what is now called DOSARM. It was located there because the air currents were suitable. This was also a help to the AAA school in such activities as sending up target balleons. Within PVO were included AAA, fighter planes, camouflage units, and fire fighters. There were no PVO organizations with Army units, only AAA. PVO was used for the defense of rear areas; for example, there was a PVO corps in the Baku area. However, with the outbreak of World War II each army had a small section under the Chief of PVO (Nachalnik PVO), who was in charge of AAA and camouflage. this type of organization was probably eliminated subsequently because it duplicated the functions of AAA commanding efficers. There was a separate PVO "Upravlenie" (Administration) in the Natter were subordinated to the military in PVO, although the civilians were not included in the T/O.	7
50X1 50X1 50X1	named the Antiaircraft Artillery (AAA) School (Shkola Zenitni Artillerii). AAA (Zenitnaya Artilleria) was a part of the Artillery. The school offered advanced courses incorporating latest known techniques in AAA. At least some of the students Were quite important officers, such as the Chief of Artillery of a military district (okrug). The school was not a general PVO (Protive-Vozdushneye Oborona - Air Defense) installation, but an AAA school. Of course, there may be more than one school there now 1954. At Yevpatoriya there was also a glider school under what is now called DOSARM. It was located there because the air currents were suitable. This was also a help to the AAA school in such activities as sending up target balleons. Within PVO were included AAA, fighter planes, camouflage units, and fire fighters. There were no PVC organizations with Army units, only AAA. PVO was used for the defense of rear areas; for example, there was a PVO corps in the Baku area. However, with the outbreak of World War II each army had a small section under the Chief of PVO (Nachalnik PVO), who was in charge of AAA and camouflage. There was a separate PVO "Upravlenie" (Administration) in the Ministry of Defense. PVO included both Army and civilian personnel. The latter were subordinated to the military in PVO. although the civilians were	7
50X1 50X1 50X1	named the Antiaircraft Artillery (AAA) School (Shela Zenitni Artillerii). AAA (Zenitnaya Artilleria) was a part of the Artillery. The school offered advanced courses incorporating latest known techniques in AAA. At least some of the students were quite important officers, such as the Chief of Artillery of a military district (okrug). The school was not a general PVO (Protive-Vozdushneye Oberona - Air Defense) installation, but an AAA school. Of course, there may be more than one school there now 1954. At Yevpatoriya there was also a glider school under what is now called DOSARM. It was located there because the air currents were suitable. This was also a help to the AAA school in such activities as sending up target balleons. Within PVO were included AAA, fighter planes, camouflage units, and fire fighters. There were no PVO organizations with Army units, only AAA. PVO was used for the defense of rear areas; for example, there was a PVO corps in the Baku area. However, with the outbreak of World War II each army had a small section under the Chief of PVO (Nachalnik PVO), who was in charge of AAA and camouflage. this type of organization was probably eliminated subsequently because it duplicated the functions of AAA commanding efficers. There was a separate PVO "Upravlenie" (Administration) in the Natter were subordinated to the military in PVO, although the civilians were not included in the T/O.	7
50X1 50X1	named the Antiaircraft Artillery (AAA) School (Shkola Zenitni Artillerii). AAA (Zenitnaya Artilleria) was a part of the Artillery. The school offered advanced courses incorporating latest known techniques in AAA. At least some of the students were quite important officers, such as the Chief of Artillery of a military district (okrug). The school was not a general PVO (Protive-Vozdushneye Oborona - Air Defense) installation, but an AAA school. Of course, there may be more than one school there now 1954. At Yevpatoriya there was also a glider school under what is now called DOSARM. It was lecated there because the air currents were suitable. This was also a help to the AAA school in such activities as sending up target balleons. Within PVO were included AAA, fighter planes, camouflage units, and fire fighters. There were no PVO organizations with Army units, only AAA. PVO was used for the defense of rear areas; for example, there was a PVO corps in the Baku area. However, with the outbreak of World War II each army had a small section under the Chief of PVO (Nachalnik PVO), who was in charge of AAA and camouflage. this type of organization was probably eliminated subsequently because it duplicated the functions of AAA commanding efficers. There was a separate PVO "Upravlenie" (Administration) in the Ninistry of Defense. PVO included both Army and civilian personnel. The latter were subordinated to the military in PVO, although the civilians were not included in the T/O. -end- CLASSIFICATION CONFIDENTIAL DISTRIBUTION	7
50X1 50X1	named the Antiaircraft Artillery (AAA) School (Shkola Zenitni Artillerii). AAA (Zenitnaya Artilleria) was a part of the Artillery. The school offered advanced courses incorporating latest known techniques in AAA. At least some of the students were quite important officers, such as the Chief of Artillery of a military district (okrug). The school was not a general PVO (Protivo-Vozdushneye Oborona - Air Defense) installation, but an AAA school. Of course, there may be more than one school there now 1954. At Yevpatoriya there was also a glider school under what is now called DOSARM. It was located there because the air currents were suitable. This was also a help to the AAA school in such activities as sending up target balleons. Within PVO were included AAA, fighter planes, camouflage units, and fire fighters. There were no PVO organizations with Army units, only AAA. PVO was used for the defense of rear areas; for example, there was a PVO corps in the Baku area. However, with the outbreak of World War II each army had a small section under the Chief of PVO (Nachalnik PVO), who was in charge of AAA and camouflage. this type of organization was probably eliminated subsequently because it duplicated the functions of AAA commanding efficers. There was a separate PVO "Upravlenie" (Administration) in the Ministry of Defense. PVO included both Army and civilian personnel. The latter were subordinated to the military in PVO, although the civilians were not included in the T/O.	7